PART THREE

Directions Sheet

Objective: In Part 3 you will report the answers to each of your questions to create a concise and thorough overview of your topic.

- You will turn each of your questions into a thesis statement that will then be supported by all the information gathered while doing research in the library or online.
- Your thesis statement should provide the reader with a clear blueprint as to what your information is.
- You will then write the details of what you found while doing research to support your thesis statement. You will do this for each of your questions.

Introduction (at least one paragraph)

- State and briefly describe your topic
- Tell again what you knew, thought you knew, and what you guessed about your topic before you began research (A review of Part 1).

Body (several paragraphs)

- Organize your information in order by question
- Review what information you found for each question and turn each question into a thesis statement.
- Once you write your thesis statements for each question, begin writing part 3 in the order of your questions in essay format.
- You should strive to have several paragraphs for each question. Remember that your information (research) should support your thesis statement.
- You must have at least two sources per question.
- You must include at least two quotations throughout Part 3.

Conclusion (at least one paragraph)

- Strive to answer this question: Why do you think this topic is important to our understanding of world history? What is the big idea of your topic?
